JUDGE DONNELLY'S TRIAL IS HALTED

Prosecution is Again Given More Time.

JUDGE'S WISHES DISREGARDED

More Dilly Dallying Permitted by the Court.

The Supreme Court Must Decide a Point in a Similar Case Before the Trial of Judge Michael Donnelly Can Proceed.

Judge Michael Donnelly will not be tried for embezzlement at this term of court, as Judge Johnson granted a motion of the prosecutor for a continuance, pending a decision from the supreme court on the ruling in the Metzgar case.

Judge Donnelly will be placed on trial charged with obtaining money under false pretenses and forgery. The case against Judge Michael Donnelly, charged with embezzlement, may not come to trial before next fall.

When the case was called in common pleas court Thursday morning, Prosecuting Attorney Webster presented two motions asking for a continuance. One of these motions came from the prosecutor and the other was signed by W. H. Miller, representing the attorney general's department.

Both motions asked that the case not ever until the supreme court passed on the judge's ruling in the Metzgar case, which has just been decided by Judge Curtis T. Johnson in favor of the defendant.

Metzgar was charged with the embezzlement of money, whereas the evidence went to show that negotiable paper, and not currency, was taken. Judge Johnson ruled that checks or drafts were not money and that the indictment was consequently defective.

Prosecuting Attorney Webster, in presenting his motions for a continuance Thursday morning, said that the case the state had prepared against Judge Donnelly was in every respect similar to the evidence adduced in the Metzgar case, and that if the state had no case against Metzgar, it was equally unable to convict Donnelly.

To Get Early Decision. He said that he wanted the case continued until the ruling of the supreme court had been secured on Blagg.
